

1.

The conditions are met. I've willfully given the information (Article 7 part 4) and they specified where they were going to use my data (Article 5 part 1). I was also clearly given the ways they are going to process the data etc. (Article 5 part 1)

2.

I have the right to know:

The purposes of processing, the categories of data used, the people who the data is being shared to, my right to know how long it will be stored. I think they are respected fairly well. Under the article 15, I am allowed to know the purposes of the processing, as the paragraph "a" describes. I am also allowed to get my data erased, as "e" describes.

3. Anonymisation is the act of permanently removing any identifiers in the data, such as names etc. while pseudoanonymisation only substitutes them for nicknames or similar items. Anonymised data is no longer included in the GDPR.
